CHICAGO ELECTS REPUBLICAN MAYOR

WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON DEFEATS WILLIAM E. DEVER

Victor Wins Battle of the Ballots Over the Slogan "America First"—The Campaign Made By the Three Candidates Which At Times Took On the Characteristics of a Three Ring Circus With Each of the Candidates Providing Amusement.

William Hale "Big Bill" Thompson, Republican mayor of Chicago from 1915 to 1923, Tuesday was elected to that office for the third time.

Thompson, who conducted his campaign with a slogan of "America First" won over Mayor William E. Dever, Democrat incumbent in one of the bitterest and most closely contested elections in Chicago's history. Dr. John Dill Robertson, who ran as an independent, offered no serious opposition.

With 115 scattered precincts missing the vote from 2269 precincts gave Thompson 485,270; Dever 418,743 and Robertson 48,562.

These figures gave Thompson a plurality of 71,527 and a majority of 22,965 and indicated that his final plurality would be around 75,000 votes and his majority about 25,000.

In the precincts reporting 947,575 votes were cast, indicating the final vote would be near 1,000,000.

Despite the record breaking vote and the injection into the bitter campaign of personal animosities, religion and race issues, the election was singularly free of disorder. Except for a minor disturbance on the north side, there had been discussion of calling out troops to maintain order.

Two bombings, hours before the polls opened, wrecked two Democratic club houses in the Forty-second ward just north of the river, which embraces the gold coast homes of the wealthy and the humbler abodes of ward heelers and rooming house habitués.

One of the bombs was directed against the headquarters of State Representative Lawrence O'Brien.

A number of reports of kidnappings and shootings proved false.

After an inspection of polling places, John Stege, captain of detectives, viewed the election as being "as quiet as a Quaker funeral."

The record breaking vote also was counted in record breaking time and four hours after the polls closed at 4 o'clock virtually the entire mayoralty vote had been tabulated.

Despite the fact that Thompson and Dever had forecast victory by from 150,000 to 200,000, the winning plurality was one of the closest ever returned and was by far the closest ever returned in a mayoralty election for so large a vote.

The election campaign, which at times took on many of the characteristics of a three-ring circus with each of the candidates providing amusement, Tuesday wound up with a big celebration as soon as Thompson's victory was assured.

Around the city hall great crowds gathered and Thompson's supporters gleefully handed out hundreds of new brooms, with the comment that the new mayor upon his return to the city hall after a four years' absence would "sweep the building clean."

Dr. John Dill Robertson, at one time city health commissioner under Thompson, and running as an independent candidate with a slogan of "People's ownership—smash crime rings," and with the backing of Fred Lundin, once Thompson's principal backer, ran a poor third with an indicated vote of about 50,000.

Thompson was born in Massachusetts, the son of William Hale and Medora Gale Thompson. He came to Chicago while a child and later spent some time on ranches in the west, where he began wearing the cowboy hats always associated with him.

He inherited a large fortune and later entered politics, serving as alderman, county commissioner and as war time mayor, during which his designation of Chicago as "the sixth German city" was roundly criticized.

Mayor Deven issued the following statement.

"I am perfectly satisfied now that the people have made their choice. I made the best fight possible under the circumstances and I hope that all is well with this fine city. May I take this opportunity to thank so many fine men and women who gave so much time and aid in my campaign."

Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney and principal backer of Thompson, in a statement said:

"I want to congratulate the real decent men and women of Chicago on the result of the election. They are to be congratulated on their courage in standing for their conviction in the face of the character of the campaign waged by the Deconrats."

CRITICAL PERIODS OF HISTORY

Was the Subject Matter of the Monday Club at Its Last Meeting.

Critical Periods of History was the subject matter of the Monday club program for this week.

Miss Phelps reviewed the Temperance movement, beginning with the crusade started in Hillsborough, in 1873. This brought the immediate result of one hundred and nine saloons closing and twenty-two drug stores pledging themselves not to sell liquor. Seemingly, Miss Phelps said we hear only the adverse side of the enforcement of the Eighteenth amendment. The death rate from all causes declined over ten per cent, following prohibition. And the economic gain to the nation is vast; in dollars it has been estimated at six billions.

The English Reformation was the subject of a paper by Miss Weldon. It was in part: "No great change in religion and politics can be the creation of any one man. A revolution must be in harmony, with the spirit of the age, else it could never be accomplished. Thus, was the intolerance of the old regime thrown off and the true spiritual continuity of faith and worship of the earliest ages, preserved, and this the labors of no one generation could have produced."

The Battle of Waterloo was discussed by Miss Elizabeth Renick. She had visited the scene of battle, of which she gave some personal observations. Miss Renick referred to Victor Hugo's wonderful description of the event in which is portrayed the thought, that God gave the victory to the right.

Victory over Burgoyne at Saratoga, was given by Mrs. Hulse Hays. She brought out the story, ever interesting to us, whom it concerns of how the English kings sowed the seed of the American revolution in their zeal to have America colonized. Mrs. Hays described the character of George III making it aptly fit into the saying: "If not to be a bad man, is to be a good man, George III was a good man."

She brought out how in 1783, Burgoyne's soldiers had been merged into the American people, and that the outstanding result of this was the Treaty of Friendship with France, in which that country asked in return for services, only that America should never restore the English kings' sovereignty, and, thus, Burgoyne made possible the United States.

MRS. E. J. DOUGLAS DEAD.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jones Douglas, wife of Harry Douglas, succumbed at her home, 189 South Scioto street, Columbus, Monday night following an illness due to influenza.

The funeral services will be held at Schoedinger's chapel, Columbus, Thursday morning at 10 a. m. Rev. Davis, of the Central Presbyterian church will officiate. Burial will be at Forest cemetery, this city.

T. H. DURRETT DEAD.

Funeral services for Thomas H. Durrett, 81, Civil war veteran, who died Monday at Sandusky, will be held at 3:30 o'clock Wednesday at his home in Commercial Point. Burial in the cemetery there. A brother, James Durrett, Orient, and four sisters, Mrs. Ola Gray, Commercial Point; Mrs. Belle Hewitt, Westerville; Mrs. Anna Alkire, Delaware and Mrs. Minnie Gray, Gardner, New York, survive.

EYES' CHARM

Greatly Increased By Skill In Making-Up. Jump To Highest Level Since 1913.

"If a little shadow paste applied with consummate skill gives added depth and allure to the eyes, who's to stay the hand that directs the provocative artifice? Not I," says Eileen Bourne, beauty specialist, in an article in this week's Liberty, "if the shadow paste is skillfully applied.

"Eye make-up is in disfavor only when it bears the trade mark of the crude amateur," Miss Bourne explains, "and regretfully it must be recorded that skill in intensifying the color of the eyes has not reached the perfection of rouge applications to the cheek and lip.

"The principal points to observe in trying to make interesting eyes more interesting, and lovely ones more seductive, are to use coloring to suit individual needs, to apply it lightly, and to see that the two eyes absolutely match in every detail. A heavier make-up on one eye than the other has a distorting effect.

"Always keep in mind that the purpose of shading the eye is to soften it. Unless you want an elongated or Oriental effect," Miss Bourne tells the women, "don't draw long lines under the lower lid. A bit of a shadowing may be placed at the outer center point of the eyeball and shaded delicately a fraction of an inch beyond."

RAILROAD STOCKS

New York, April 4.—Heavy accumulation of the railroad shares, influenced largely by excellent current earnings and traffic statements today sent the average of 20 leading issues traded on the New York stock exchange to the highest level since 1913.

Erie Railroad common sold above $55 a share for the first time in 25 years. The apparently small floating supply of the stock among leading commission houses indicated that large blocks had been taken out of the market, assumably by the Van Swearingens who obtained control of the road a few years ago as part of their consolidation plan.

STRIKES GOLD; SAVES OLD HOME

"Dime Thriller" Yarn of a Wandering Son Told by Old Prospectors.

Williams Lake, B. C.—This yarn has all the earmarks of a "dime thriller," but prospectors who have lived and toiled for gold in this vicinity for a quarter of a century have just dug it out of the remote past and are retelling it to the newcomers with all the solemnity befitting a true story. Many years ago the Barkerville fields near here proved a lodestone of sufficient strength to draw hardy souls from every quarter of the globe. Among them was Benjamin Dillers, a youth from an obscure New York state town. Dillers had heard of the rich Barkerville strike in the Cariboo region while panning gold in California. Dillers had started out to make a quick fortune following the death of his father and he left his mother at home. For several months the young man wrote regularly to his mother, but fickle fortune seemed to be passing him by and his correspondence became very irregular.

Dillers Strikes It Rich.
He started to work a small claim near here and soon discovered his small area was enormously rich, for it contained what became proverbial in the olden days at Barkerville, "blue dirt and the bedrock pitching." Wherever these conditions were present on the creek the miners took heart and worked all the harder. In one shift Dillers recovered 208 pounds of gold, which was equal to $55,000. The young miner worked away until the whole area was cleaned up, and, unlike many others, he saved every penny above actual expenses.

When his claim was finished he would not consider further investments or additional prospecting, but hurried back to his mother, from whom he had not heard in a long time. Provided by circumstance with the background of a true "thriller," Dillers arrived at his mother's home in time to see all her property being auctioned off to the highest bidder. No one knew the stranger with the bushy black whiskers, and no one cared who he was until he began buying everything worth while.

Saves the Old Homestead.
When the sale was over Dillers, with dramatic instinct, turned over to his mother all the deeds of sale and then poured gold to the value of several thousand dollars on the table. The neighbors and curiosity seekers discreetly withdrew and left the reunited mother and son to themselves. Dillers and his mother remained in the old home for several years and then removed to New York city. If the authenticity of this story is questioned the miners will refer you to the records in the city hall at New York, which show that the rich young prospector was elected to the New York council.

Maine Banker Will Fortune to Humanity

Bath, Maine.—An estate estimated at $1,718,000, of which all but $18,000 is in personal property, was left by George P. Davenport, retired banker and broker, according to William S. Shorey, Arthur J. Dunton and J. Edward Drake, named by him as executors and trustees under the terms of his will, which has been filed in the first session of the Sagadahoc county Probate court.

Mr. Davenport made 20 specific bequests, most of them to institutions, and only one of them personal, totaling $116,000, and the income from the residue, estimated at considerably more than $1,500,000, is to be expended by the trustees for religious, educational and charitable institutions and organizations "which have for their object the good of the world and the bettering of the condition of the human race."

The trustees have nominated Oliver Moses, Charles C. Low and Daniel Williams as appraisers of the estate.

The will was drawn August 26, 1908. Mr. Davenport was never married and upon his death left no near relatives. Outside of a $10,000 bequest to Miss Nellie A. Webber, who was his housekeeper for a long term of years, there are no personal bequests.

Mr. Davenport stated that his father, the late Charles Davenport, gave during his lifetime a very large amount of money to their relatives and he did not feel it his duty to give more.

English Again Taking Snuff With Flourish

London.—Snuff is once more coming into favor in some circles in England as an elegant social accomplishment. The fine gentleman of 1927 points his witty phrases by tapping the lid of his snuffbox, and, as he takes a pinch, makes an arabesque flourish in the air with all the conscious grace of an Eighteenth century beau.

The revival of this custom has created a problem: How can a snuffbox be accommodated without ruining the outline of the modern dress suit? It is only possible to carry a light cargo in evening dress as designed by the tailor of today.

On a slim man even a handkerchief or cigarette case makes a contour that imperils the lines of the suit.

English Again Taking Snuff With Flourish
London.—Snuff is once more coming into favor in some circles in England as an elegant social accomplishment. The fine gentleman of 1927 points his witty phrases by tapping the lid of his snuffbox, and, as he takes a pinch, makes an arabesque flourish in the air with all the conscious grace of an Eighteenth century beau.
The revival of this custom has created a problem: How can a snuffbox be accommodated without ruining the outline of the modern dress suit? It is only possible to carry a light cargo in evening dress as designed by the tailor of today.
On a slim man even a handkerchief or cigarette case makes a contour that imperils the lines of the suit.

Relinquishing his seat to a lady when he's ready to leave the car is the limit of one man's politeness.

Joseph W. Adkins,

Economic Value of Song BirdsAre Great Asset to Farm
Wood Lots and Deserve
Good Protection.(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)The care of birds should be made a part of the routine management of farm wood lots, according to the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture. Intensive studies of the relation of birds to wood lots made in the East, which apply in most parts of the country, show that in general birds are a great asset to wood lots and, with one or two exceptions, should be encouraged and protected.Direct Benefit to Trees.The direct benefit to trees from birds is chiefly due to their distribution of seeds and the resulting reproduction. Birds carry in their flight the fleshy fruits and nuts and scatter them much farther from their point of origin than would be possible by any other natural means. They also aid in reseeding coniferous trees. Birds are the most important natural check on tree-destroying rodents and are of great value in cutting down the numbers of an enormous variety of insect pests of woodlands. Indirect benefits come also through the presence of such game birds as the ruffed grouse, which attracts hunters and increases the revenue of an entire neighborhood, and through bird life in general, which makes woodlands more attractive for recreational purposes.Although the individual species of birds present in wood lots may differ according to climate and locality, very few birds are undesirable. The yellow-bellied sapsucker, however, is one of the few. It causes considerable damage to timber and should not be encouraged. A few kinds of hawks and occasionally screech-owls prey to an undesirable extent upon smaller birds that are beneficial because they eat insects. Such birds found causing damage should be done away with promptly.Keeping Desirable Birds.The fundamentals of keeping desirable birds on a wood land area are to protect them as thoroughly as possible, to see that they have a continuous supply of water, to provide nest boxes for the hole-nesting species, and, when necessary, to supplement the natural food supply. Some of the most favored kinds of wild berries can be planted about the woodland margins, and winter foods can be provided by means of various sheltering devices. In trimming operations, provision can be made for some of the seed-eating birds by leaving some of their favorite seed-producing trees.
The prevention of fire is essential both to good wood-lot management and to the preservation of the birds. Practically every measure that is good for the wood lot, including gradual rather than wholesale cutting or thinning of timber, is good for the birds.Must Feed for Eggs Is*Suggestion of ExpertFeed the farm hen a ration that will make her work and then turn around and work some more is the suggestion of O. N. Johnson, superintendent of the University of Wisconsin flocks.
"The harder you make her work the harder she will work to produce."The university flock is fed two distinct rations. The scratch ration consists of one part of wheat and two of cracked corn. Other feeds such as barley or oats may be substituted in place of wheat. The scratch feed is scattered to make the hens exercise.The second ration which is placed in the self-feeder consists of equal parts of beef scrap, bran gluten, rolled oats and cracked corn. About one pound of salt and charcoal is added to each one hundred pounds of the mixture.
This is placed in a self feeder where the hens can get it whenever they are hungry or not looking for scratch feed.A light helping of scratch feed is given at noon to keep the hens at work. Green feed such as mangels or cabbage are tossed into coop at this time to add variety to the hen's diet.
The evening feed should consist of shelled corn. Corn is a heating food that will keep the hens warm while getting ready to lay the next day's eggs.FARM FACTSThere is no known seed treatment which will prevent smut in corn.When better soils are made, legumes and live stock will make them.Whoever works only for himself and not for his community has a poor boss.A frost that kills the leaves on growing millet reduces its value for hay and practically ruins the seed crop unless it is nearly ripe.Easier credit, cheaper transportation, better marketing, will not save the inefficient farmer who produces at too great a cost per pound or bushel.Nothing is more aggravating than to try cutting alfalfa in a field full of gopher mounds. And gophers can be eradicated easier now than at any other time by putting strychnine poisoned wheat in their runways.PRESBYTERIAN lence $2600 for the work of the

Murals Centuries Ago

Archeologists have found in southern Europe evidences of the first mural decorations, dating back, according to their compilations, to the Sixth and Eighth centuries B. C. These decorations were crude paintings on the walls of these primitive living abodes and depicted, for the most part, the life game on which these early peoples depended for food.

Washington's Swords

The only references we can find to the swords George Washington left when he died are in two books on Mount Vernon, one by Minnie Kendall-Lowther, and the other by J. E. Jones. The former refers to three swords left to his nephews, while the latter says, "There are four swords, three of which Washington presented to his nephews."—Washington Star.

PUSH BUTTON FARMING A STEP NEARER

Rural Electrification Studies and Tests Point to New Era.

The day when the farmer will be able to lie abed on a Sunday morning and merely press the button to get his chores done seems to be approaching reality. A day as wholly idyllic as that may never dawn, but at least it is foreshadowed by such things as these:

Experiments in grooming animals by electricity; washing bottles and dishes, milking the cows and running the separator, bringing feed and mixing it, baling, drying and hoisting hay, to say nothing of using a vacuum cleaner in the poultry house as well as in the farm home, operating ventilating, water, refrigerating lighting and cooking systems—all by electricity.

All these and many more uses for electricity on the farm and in the farm home are under trial in 22 states including Ohio. Each state is conducting some of these experiments, thru the cooperation of the state agricultural college and the light and power utilities, all working under a national committee, "Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture."

Unusual uses for electricity are on trial. In Virginia the Experimenters are attempting to control insects, the tomato worm moth in particular, by electric light. Use of electric plates or pads to sprout oats for poultry feed is being tried in another state, as is the use of electricity in seed germination.

Results of these experiments, many of which are taking place on farm and in farm homes, rather than in the laboratory, will be published as soon as available.

AMUSEMENTS

Do you know what an "Ace of Cads" is?

According to Michael Arlen's story which Luther Reed has made into a Paramount picture with Adolphe Menjou in the title role—he is a man who becomes a villain only because of his desire to help the woman he loves. A bit involved—but listen:

Chappel Maturin, young officer of the British Guards, loves Eleanour. She returns his affection until he is found in questionable company. Unknown to either of them, this discovery has been "framed" by Basil de-Gramercy, mutual friend of the lovers. Eleanour breaks their engagement and Chappel is discharged from the regiment. On hearing of Eleanour's marriage to Basil, Maturin goes to Paris.

Twenty years later he arrives in London with the light of his one love still burning. Things have changed. Basil is dead, having been killed in France. Eleanour and her daughter Joan, live with Sir Guy de Gramercy, Basil's father.

Chappel meets Joan and is attracted by the resemblance to her mother. She, in turn, falls in love with this polished man of the world. Then, in a scene of dramatic strength and splendor, Eleanour and Sir Guy beg Maturin to give up all that they hold dear, Joan.

And, for the sake of this woman he still loves, Chappel becomes a veritable "Ace of Cads" by—well—see the picture on its arrival at the Met theater today. Alice Joyce and Norman Trevor are featured in support of Menjou. Forrest Halsey adapted the Arlen story for screen use.

AMERICA DECLARED WAR TEN YEARS AGO

Stirring Scenes are Recalled, Nation Plunged Into War Against Germany.

A patriotic fervor, reincarnating the spirit of '76, gripped the American people just a decade ago as the nation was moving rapidly into the great war.

Woodrow Wilson had summoned congress to Washington in special session, had made his dramatic night address asking for a declaration of hostilities and the senate had approved the war resolution.

And so it was 10 years ago Tuesday night, the house was debating the final act to give in the early morning hours of the morrow its overwhelming verdict in favor of fighting Germany.

With that action and the subsequent signing of the resolution April 6, by President Wilson, the United States had taken the decisive step one which as it turned out, changed the course of history and helped remake the map of a large part of the world. Actual and potential resources which, all told, probably never have been equalled by any other nation in the history of the world were brought into the war under the American flag.

English as It Is Spoken

In the grade school a little girl was working a problem on the blackboard. A sidelong glance showed the teacher that she was placing the figures in column form. He asked: "Doris, are you subtracting or multiplying?" "Neither one, sir, I am 'plusing,'" was the reply.

Old English Tradition
An old midsummer eve custom in England was for a girl to walk backward into a garden and gather a rose. This had to be kept in a clean sheet of paper and never looked at until Christmas day. Tradition had it that the rose would then be as fresh as it had been in June.

ICE PATROL TAKES UP PERILOUS DUTY

Begins Annual Battle With the Icebergs.

Washington.—One of the most picturesque sea patrols in the world has just taken up its cold duty—the covering of the steamer lanes of the North Atlantic by cutters of the United States coast guard which do the work for the international ice patrol.

A bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society tells what the patrol is and how it operates.

"Fifteen years ago April 14, the Titanic, queen ship of the seas, carrying a precious cargo of some of the best minds of Europe and America, ran into an iceberg 350 miles south of Cape Race and sank with a loss of more than 1,500 lives," says the bulletin. "Ever since that catastrophe a guard has been kept each spring to protect the hundreds of ships and thousands of travelers on the world's greatest ocean ship lane."

No Ship Lost Since 1912.
"The annual battle with the bergs" can be compared to some jungle tragedy in which the lesser animals stand watch and wait for a lion that has invaded their hunting ground, to sicken and die before they again take up their normal life. The international ice patrol, the work of which is entrusted to the seamen and ships of the United States coast guard, watches and waits for the icebergs to die. For four months, from March to July, the patrol scouts for the ice monarchs which are impelled by the Labrador current to invade the haunts of man. No successful method of attacking the "enemy" has been conceived, although experiments continue. But by watching the bergs like guardian crows in a corn field, the Tampa and the Modoc are able to warn by wireless the whole flock of transatlantic shipping of ice danger. No ship has been lost since the ice patrol began its guard in 1912.

"To the layman a report that a 32-degree cold wall is over the entire Grand Banks means little. It is very significant to the ice patrol. Bergs will drift down the banks practically intact as long as they are in the Labrador current, in which the water hovers near freezing temperature. But once they cross the 'cold wall' into the Gulf stream with its 55 or 60 degree water they waste away in a few days and disappear. Each spring the Labrador current forces a cold tongue of water into the warm Gulf stream, which flows northeast toward England. The tongue reaches maximum toward the last of April and then recedes until it is confined once more to the Labrador coast."

Like Flying Dutchman.

"Going on ice patrol with either the Tampa or the Modoc in early spring is like embarking on the Flying Dutchman. That old legend of the Dutch skipper who was condemned to beat around Cape of Good Hope is very real to the coast guard men on North Atlantic service. The Dutch ship and crew shuttled over the sea buffeted by gales because once the captain uttered a monstrous oath. For two solid weeks a coast guard crew lives amid the gales of one of the most storm-plagued spots on the seven seas because of a different sort of oath the nations made that the Titanic disaster should not be repeated. That oath redeemed, the Modoc can steam into the safe shelter of Halifax for two weeks' respite while the Tampa takes her place."

T. R. Dazed Only Once, Says Railroad Veteran

Washington.—Conducting Presidents on official, political and private trips about the country is a familiar experience to Capt. David E. Hardester, veteran pullman conductor of Washington.

He served President Wilson as conductor of his official and private trains for eight years, and was in charge of Calvin Coolidge's train during his first election campaign.

"Roosevelt and Wilson were both effective rear platform speakers," in Captain Hardester's opinion, and he found them both omnivorous readers between stops.

"The only time I ever saw Roosevelt falter was when a hidden camera man unexpectedly set off a noisy flashlight," he recalled. "It seemed to come from nowhere and startled both of us. Roosevelt recovered himself instantly and smilingly putting his hand on my shoulder, remarked: 'What's the matter with you, Hardester?'"

Lizard Porridge Used to Curb Errant Husbands

Leicester, England.—Central African native wives have a firm belief in lizard porridge as a food for errant husbands, according to Rev. A. S. D. Ranger, who has returned home after many years' missionary work in central Africa.

He says the native women whose husbands have strayed from the path of faithfulness dry lizards in the sun, pound them to a powder and put it in their husbands' porridge. The women have a firm belief in the efficacy of this remedy because of the homing instinct.

Crime Is Expensive

New York.—Crime costs the United States at least $10,000,000,000 a year, it is estimated by Mark O. Prentiss in the Manufacturers' Record.

Fortune Vanished

On paper, a retired Evanston (Ill.) business man, who died last August, left an estate valued at more than $1,200,000. Recently appraisers finished sorting out the stacks of engraved promissory notes, patent rights and oil leases found in his effects and reported to the probate judge that the estate was worthless with the exception of personal belongings worth $16 and insurance policies totaling $2,682.

KENESAW MOUNTAIN AND JUDGE LANDIS' NAME

The battle of Kenesaw Mountain, according to Rhode's history of the Civil War period, is generally considered by military experts to have been the one blunder in the drive of General Sherman from Chattanooga to Atlanta.

The engagement took place on the morning of June 27, 1864, and was a foolhardy and futile attempt to storm the mountain where the strongly entrenched Confederate forces were blocking the march through Georgia. Sherman was thrown back, lost 8,000 men, and later explained that it had been a "moral victory."

Eventually, of course, Kenesaw Mountain was taken by a flank movement and the Union commander continued on through Atlanta and to the sea.

The unfortunate battle of June 27 has been but lightly touched upon by many northern historians. It might actually be now be entirely forgotten had not one of the participants been Dr. Abraham H. Landis, an assistant surgeon in the 35th Ohio Volunteer infantry.

Dr. Landis while performing an amputation on the battlefield was struck by a 12-pound cannon ball, luckily almost spent. About two years later he limped out of a hospital and went to his home at Millville, Ohio. There, in due time, he became the father of a son—his sixth child, but entitled to distinction for being the first since the war. After a heated family debate the soldier-surgeon named him Kenesaw Mountain Landis. Thus was the blunder of General Sherman immortalized.—Harry F. Pringle in Harper's Magazine.

POEMS BY A KANSAS WOMAN

Mrs. Florence M. Huber, of Topeka, Kans., formerly of this city, has recently had published a book of poems entitled "Silver Petals" by the Lutheran Book Concern of Columbus, Ohio.

Mrs. Huber has been elected to the Poetry Society of Great Britain and is a member of the League of American Pen Women and the Kansas City Authors' Club. She is a product of Washington township, this county, and made her home at the residence of Mr. Edson Stout from the time she was nine years of age until her marriage with Mr. P. A. Huber, of Topeka, Kansas. Mrs. Huber's maiden name was Huber and she taught school in both Washington and Walnut townships before going to Columbus where she was teaching at the time of her marriage.

Her poem, "Purple Grapes," which was recently published in the Kansas City Star, follows:

Purple Grapes
Purple grapes that cluster Round my open door
Lend a sweeter fragrance
Than I've known before.
Kissed by golden sunbeams
And the pearly dew,
Clinging to the trellis,
Sweet and bitter, too.
Both are there enticing
'Neath thin counterpanes,
Lacy doors of spiders
Locked by chateaux.
Life is like a garden,
Hung with purple grapes;
Some are sweet and luscious,
Some have bitter taste.
I must choose them wisely
From their beaded tower,
Or regret they lured me
To their purple bower.

GOLD STAMPEDE

New Strike 60 Miles From Tonopah Causes Rush of Prospectors.

Tonopah, Nevada, April 5.—(U.P.)—A new gold rush was on today toward Belle Helen, 60 miles east of here.

The stampede of prospectors was started yesterday with the appearance here of Gus Peterson, rancher and miner, bringing with him about 500 pounds of jewelry and gold rock.

One sample of Peterson's ore assayed $1,776 a ton. Another picked specimen with free gold running all through it was estimated to be worth between $80,000 and $50,000 a ton.

A watch may never lose a second yet be many years slow

The owner of such a watch may never miss a train or an appointment but it is the one false note in his modern makeup, probably the only thing he has that stamps him as a bit old-fashioned, a trifle behind the times. And yet a new and modish Elgin can be had at a moderate sum. Slipped into your pocket, or strapped on your wrist, it will win and hold your affection as no other watch possibly can. For Elgin is conceded to be the world's standard for watch integrity.

The Information Office

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

JOY PIERCE sat on the arm of the big stuffed chair in which her mother was darning the family stockings.

"It's like this, Mummie"—falling into the old name she was wont to use when she had something confidential to impart to her parent—"I'm going to take charge of the information office of a real estate concern."

Her mother gasped.

"My office is in the cutest little trick of a house you ever beheld. It is no bigger than a minute and has window boxes full of flowers, a flagstone path and miniature garden, casements with roses clambering about—oh, you couldn't want a sweeter place in which to work. And all I have to do is to be there at that darling desk and look pretty and answer all the questions for all the folks who drive up to ask about High Farms property."

"But that's just it—what do you know about it?" interrupted her mother.

"I can learn. They tell me I look the part and am quick and intelligent and have personality. So—I got the job! I start on Saturday and I feel sure that I shall fill the bill. Isn't it grand, Mummie?"

The days until Saturday passed so quickly for Joy that she found herself putting on her freshest green frock after an unusually careful toilet on the fateful morning of her first step into the business world.

Mr. Carstairs, senior member of the development firm that had employed her, was waiting outside the little office when she arrived. He greeted her in a businesslike manner but with friendliness and apparent approval of her charming appearance. He took her inside, instructed her as to locations of lots laid out on the map, roads, and other details that she might find useful when anyone called to ask about property.

After he had gone, Joy busied herself pulling off the dead blossoms from the flowers about the diminutive cottage. In a few moments she felt at home and was sure that she was in harmony with the environment. Every car that passed on the main road outside slowed down to glimpse the charming picture of Joy outside the pretty cottage. More than one pair of eyes lingered.

High Farms development was an attractive settlement and had been well advertised. Therefore, Joy did not wait very long before she found herself busy directing interested persons to this part or that of the section.

One morning an energetic little gray-and-blue roadster driven by a hatless young man drew up with a dash before the information office. With the alert movement of an athletic youth, the driver ran up the turf steps to the doorway where he stood looking at Joy.

"Could you give me some information about this land?" he asked.

"Why—yes. Come in," said Joy.

"Are there any restrictions—that is—must one build immediately upon any property one might buy?" he began, a trifle awkwardly, as if, perhaps, he had not quite formulated what he wanted to say.

"There are restrictions but, if you buy in good faith, you need not build immediately. But—you may not sell."

"Oh—no—no," hastened the answer from the visitor's lips. "I—that is, I might want a small lot back there in the woodsey part of the development but, well, I could not build for—a couple of years."

"That would be all right, I'm sure. Would you like me to get a salesman to go with you to see some lots?" asked Joy.

"Oh, no. No, indeed. Haven't you a map I could look at?"

Joy went with him to the slide wall where the big map of the property hung. They searched the unsold sections and finally the young man decided that a little corner lot with a strip of birch trees along the side was exactly what he wanted.

"Wouldn't you like to see it?" asked Joy, amazed.

"No—not now," he assured her.

And then he did an astonishing thing. He gave Joy his card and wrote a check to pay a deposit on the lot until the proper papers could be issued. Joy was quite overcome, and when he had gone she stood alternately looking down Cedar Swamp road after him and studying his name on the card she held.

In due time the lot was properly sold to Robert M. Sefton and all papers executed to his entire satisfaction. It seemed that he had two more years in law school and then—well, no one seemed to know what he intended to do at the end of that time.

Little by little, during that wonderful summer and later, while away at college herself, Joy began to learn of the intentions of the first person she had ever transacted business with. He had seen her on several occasions as he had passed the cottage and had decided that she was the girl that Fate had chosen for him. Therefore, he had bought a lot, made definite plans for the future and determined to carry them out, employing patience and understanding.

"But—Bob," Joy was saying to him more than two years after they had met, "are you sure I am the girl?"

"Ask the information office in your heart, Joy," he said. "It knows, even as I do."

ROTATION NOT NEW IDEA IN RAISING CROPS

Was Known Fourteen Years Before the Christia Era.

It has taken three thousand years to develop the principle of modern crop rotation, and the beginnings of that development can be traced clear back to Biblical times, a study recently made by W. W. Weir of the Bureau of Soils, United States department of agriculture reveals.

Three thousand years ago cereals were the chief source of food, and it was natural to grow these crops on the same fields year after year. But the farmers of that period finally noticed that the land was suffering. Resting the land and allowing the weeds to grow up, they found, seemed to help. The oldest record of such a practice Mr. Weir finds, is in the Mosaic laws (about 1400 B. C.), commanding the people, "And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and gather in the fruits thereof; but the seventh thou shalt let it rest and lie still."

This first stage in a crop rotation gave way about 29 B. C. to "bare fallow." Farmers then, for instance, sowed a winter grain like wheat, then a spring grain like barley, then allowed the field to lie in "bare fallow."

More than 1600 years elapsed before the third stage in rotation arrived. Then, about 1600 A. D., Flemish farmers abolished "bare fallow" in favor of clover, grown in rotation with hemp, turnips, and small grains. This was a big step forward because it permitted keeping more livestock, and renewed as well as rested the land.

The fourth stage, adopted in the fields by English farmers during the 18th century, was the introduction of intertillage. Nowadays, it is customary for farmers to use a rotation of an intertilled crop, a small grain crop and a grass or leguminous crop.

Murals Centuries Ago
Archeologists have found in southern Europe evidences of the first mural decorations, dating back, according to their compilations, to the Sixth and Eighth centuries B. C. These decorations were crude paintings on the walls of these primitive living abodes and depicted, for the most part, the live game on which these early peoples depended for food.

Washington's Swords
The only references we can find to the swords George Washington left when he died are in two books on Mount Vernon, one by Minnie Kendall-Lowther, and the other by J. E. Jones. The former refers to three swords left to his nephews, while the latter says, "There are four swords, three of which Washington presented to his nephews."—Washington Star.

PUSH BUTTON FARMING A STEP NEARER

Rural Electrification Studies and Tests Point to New Era.

The day when the farmer will be able to lie abed on a Sunday morning and merely press the button to get his chores done seems to be approaching reality. A day as wholly idyllic as that may never dawn, but at least it is foreshadowed by such things as these:

Experiments in grooming animals by electricity; washing bottles and dishes, milking the cows and running the separator, bringing feed and mixing it, baling, drying and hoisting hay, to say nothing of using a vacuum cleaner in the poultry house as well as in the farm home, operating ventilating, water, refrigerating lighting and cooking systems—all by electricity.

All these and many more uses for electricity on the farm and in the farm home are under trial in 22 states including Ohio. Each state is conducting some of these experiments, thru the cooperation of the state agricultural college and the light and power utilities, all working under a national committee, "Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture."

Unusual uses for electricity are on trial. In Virginia the Experimenters are attempting to control insects, the tomato worm moth in particular, by electric light. Use of electric plates or pads to sprout oats for poultry feed is being tried in another state, as is the use of electricity in seed germination.

Results of these experiments, many of which are taking place on farm and in farm homes, rather than in the laboratory, will be published as soon as available.

AMUSEMENTS

Do you know what an "Ace of Cads" is?

According to Michael Arlen's story which Luther Reed has made into a Paramount picture with Adolphe Menjou in the title role—he is a man who becomes a villain only because of his desire to help the woman he loves. A bit involved—but listen:

Chappel Maturin, young officer of the British Guards, loves Eleanor. She returns his affection until he is found in questionable company. Unknown to either of them, this discovery has been "framed" by Basil de Gramercy, mutual friend of the lovers. Eleanor breaks their engagement and Chappel is discharged from the regiment. On hearing of Eleanor's marriage to Basil, Maturin goes to Paris.

Twenty years later he arrives in London with the light of his one love still burning. Things have changed. Basil is dead, having been killed in France. Eleanor and her daughter Joan, live with Sir Guy de Gramercy, Basil's father.

Chappel meets Joan and is attracted by the resemblance to her mother. She, in turn, falls in love with this polished man of the world. Then, in a scene of dramatic strength and splendor, Eleanor and Sir Guy beg Maturin to give up all that they hold dear, Joan.

And, for the sake of this woman he still loves, Chappel becomes a veritable "Ace of Cads" by—well—see the picture on its arrival at the Met theater today. Alice Joyce and Norman Trevor are featured in support of Menjou. Forrest Halsey adapted the Arlen story for screen use.

AMERICA DECLARED WAR TEN YEARS AGO

Stirring Scenes are Recalled, Nation Plunged Into War Against Germany.

A patriotic fervor, reincarnating the spirit of '76, gripped the American people just a decade ago as the nation was moving rapidly into the great war.

Woodrow Wilson had summoned congress to Washington in special session, had made his dramatic night address asking for a declaration of hostilities and the senate had approved the war resolution.

And so it was 10 years ago Tuesday night, the house was debating the final act to give in the early morning hours of the morrow its overwhelming verdict in favor of fighting Germany.

With that action and the subsequent signing of the resolution April 6, by President Wilson, the United States had taken the decisive step one which as it turned out, changed the course of history and helped remake the map of a large part of the world. Actual and potential resources which, all told, probably never have been equalled by any other nation in the history of the world were brought into the war under the American flag.

English as It Is Spoken

In the grade school a little girl was working a problem on the blackboard. A sidelong glance showed the teacher that she was placing the figures in column form. He asked: "Doris, are you subtracting or multiplying?" "Neither one, sir, I am 'plusing,'" was the reply.
